

The IRC in Greece

THE IRC RESPONSE

In 2015 early 2016, over one million people fleeing conflict and persecution travelled through Greece in search of safety and sanctuary in Europe. The International Rescue Committee (IRC) launched an emergency assessment on the Greek island of Lesbos in June 2015, and by the next month had established IRC Hellas and its first operations in response to the developing humanitarian crisis. Following the closing of the borders along the 'Balkan Route', and the implementation of the EU-Turkey Statement in March 2016, the IRC expanded its programming across mainland Greece and provided vital support and protection to the refugee and asylum seeking population hosted mainly in camp sites. Since then, the number of people arriving in Greece has decreased significantly but has not ceased (about 50,000 arrivals in 2018), and the possibility for legal onward movement has almost disappeared, changing the needs for asylum seekers and refugees, who will have to remain and integrate into Greek society. IRC's response therefore adapted, focusing more on the urban areas and adding services for integration.

IRC locations in Greece include Athens, Lesbos and Chios

As of June 2019, an estimated 76,000 refugees including over 3,800 unaccompanied children, live in Greece, more than 15,500 of these on the Greek islands, often in crowded, substandard conditions. Over 75% of the newly arrived are from Afghanistan, Syria, Iraq and Palestine and more than half are women and children. IRC Hellas responds to the needs of the most vulnerable with a holistic approach that spans from reception to integration; on the islands and on the mainland.
